

Socratic Seminar Quarter #3 Preparation:

What is India's biggest challenge at this time and why do you think so?

What are the two most important things the Indian government can do to provide a successful future for India (this can include the environment and the population)? How could it achieve these two things?

In what ways does your home country face similar challenges to India? How has your country handled these issues? Is there anything India could learn from or use to solve its problems?

What is the responsibility of the individual in a society? In other words, what must you and I do if we are to consider ourselves successful citizens wherever we may be living?

Which of the issues you have learned about this quarter through viewing Salaam Bombay, reading Broken Glass, and undertaking your POP research have most made you think differently about the world? How do you think differently? What action, if any, will you take because of this new worldview?