

I want to talk about:

How one cause for Ms. Brown burning the food is that she doesn't like cooking.

My paraphrased research says:

Ever since childhood Ms. Brown has been more interested in eating food than cooking it. She takes no delight in slicing, dicing, and sauteing. She doesn't enjoy the crisp texture of the vegetables or mixing flavors into new combinations as do some of her friends.

Point

Could be a general idea: Not everyone likes to cook.

Could be specific to Ms. Brown:
Unquestionably Ms. Brown has never been accused of being overly domestic in the kitchen.

Can't be too general: There are many things to do in the house.

Proof

Ever since childhood Ms. Brown has been more interested in eating food than cooking it. She takes no delight in slicing, dicing, and sauteing, and doesn't enjoy the crisp texture of the vegetables or mixing flavors into new combinations as do some of her friends (Brown).

Comment

Comment upon the evidence to discuss how it supports the claim:

This dislike for cooking results in little interest in the art. Therefore she views preparing food to be a chore, which results in her placing limited attention to the task.

Shouldn't give a solution if it's my cause paragraph.

Possible cause paragraph PPC1:

Unquestionably Ms. Brown has never been accused of being overly domestic in the kitchen. Ever since childhood she has been more interested in eating food than cooking it. She takes no delight in slicing, dicing, and sauteing, and she doesn't enjoy the crisp texture of the vegetables or mixing flavors into new combinations as do some of her friends (Brown). This dislike for cooking results in little interest in the art. Therefore she views preparing food to be a chore, which results in her placing limited attention to the task.

Remember, there will be 2 more causes

1. Too busy
2. Too easily distracted

Each of these will need a PPC also
